This is one of the natural ice pools of the planet,
a spring, fed from the ice
core of spiridon.

Set amongst the boulders
it's glistening surface bubbles slowly and gives off a gentle haze of steam.

DOCTOR WHO and T.RON appear around one of the rocks and move to stand at it's edge.

DOCTOR WHO: I noticed this this morning. Have you seen them before?

T.RON: Mmmmm. They're all over the place. Molten ice pools...They're sort of natural springs...

DOCTOR WHO stoops and gathers a handful of the molten ice.

DOCTOR WHO: And hyper-cold...

He shakes the ice off his hand and blows on his fingers.

DOCTOR WHO: It's an odd phenomena of water on this planet that it sustains sub zero temperatures but remains semi-liquid.

T.RON: I'm sorry...I don't see the significance of all this...We've known about these ice pools for some time...

DOCTOR WHO: The Daleks are vulnerable to extremely low temperatures...They are hardly able to function at all at sub-zero levels...Now do you see?

It takes TALON a few seconds, but finally his face reflects that the idea has penetrated. He starts to grin.

TALON: Yes. Yes I do see...

Then very business like:

TALON: Come on...let's look around and find a way to make it work...

DOCTOR WHO looks rather pleased with himself.

DOCTOR WHO: It's a good feeling isn't it? When the hunted become the hunters.
